APPENDIX A – DESCRIPTIONS OF COURSES TAUGHT

Howard University School of Divinity:

THEO 221. Philosophy of Religion. This course is an introduction to the discipline and method of philosophy and the relationship of philosophy to the study of religion. Through a reading of classical and contemporary sources, the course examines definitions of religion and issues such as God's existence, attributes, and relationship to and action in the physical world, the nature and significance of religious experience and its potential as a medium for truth and knowledge, the problem of evil, humans as persons having minds and souls, life after death, the relation of religion to morality, and the relationship of religion to science. Fall semesters: 2003, 2005, 2009, 2011, 2015, 2017, 2021, 2023. Spring semesters: 2004, 2006, 2012, 2014, 2016, 2020.

THEO 305. Systematic Theology I. Through select reading of classical and contemporary texts, this course acquaints students with the discipline of theology. The course examines issues and controversies that form the foundations of Christian thought as well as the rational structure and interpretative methods that characterize the field of theology. Special attention is given to constructions of Christian theism amid various philosophical, cosmological, social, and cultural challenges to the plausibility of belief in God and special divine action. Fall semesters: 2004, 2006, 2008, 2010, 2012, 2014, 2016, 2018, 2020, 2022.

THEO 310. Systematic Theology II. This course examines the nature and method of theological discourse. Various theological perspectives on doctrines of Christian faith will be treated critically and systematically. Major doctrines (or themes) will include God, Christ, Holy Spirit, Creation, Theological Anthropology, Sin and Salvation, Church and Its Mission and Ministry, Sacraments, Eschatology, Theology of Religions, and Religious Belief and the Natural Sciences. Students are required to construct a personal Credo, based on their presumed mastery of theological sources and methodology. Prerequisite: THEO 305 Systematic Theology I or its equivalent. Spring semesters: 2005, 2007, 2009, 2011, 2013, 2015, 2017, 2019, 2021, 2023.

THEO 315/515. Black Theology. This course is a study of contemporary black theology in the United States. The course examines the history, methodology, and systematic construction of black theology. Critical assessments of black theology and alternative models for the theological interpretation of African American religion will be examined. Special attention will be given to (1) the construction and revision of Christian doctrines, (2) black theological accounts of Christology (the person of Christ), and (3) theological critiques of American exceptionalism and violence. Prerequisite: THEO 305, Black Church History, or an equivalent. Fall semesters: 2003, 2004, 2017, 2019. Spring semesters: 2009, 2013, 2016, 2022.

THEO 322. Theological Responses to Atrocity. This course is an examination of how religious belief, language, and institutions may contribute to or support atrocities, inclusive of genocide, mass killing, and other serious human rights violations, as well as be a positive moral force for justice and peace towards addressing past and current atrocities and prevention of impending atrocities. This examination includes: exploration of the notion of moral responsibility across geopolitical boundaries; assessment of conceptions of human nature (why persons participate in violence and killing) and theodicy (why believe in God when evil and suffering are extreme); and reflection on the place of truth-telling, forgiveness and reconciliation in transitional justice. The examination is further deepened by review of historical cases (e.g., the Holocaust, Cambodian genocide, Rwandan genocide, and ISIS) that show the complexity and commonality of atrocities in different contexts. Spring 2017.

THEO 325. Modern Theology. This course is a study of the development of theology during the modern period, that is, in the 19th and 20th centuries. In this semester's offering of the course, special attention will be given to various perspectives on the encounter between humans and God. Prerequisite: THEO 305, Church History II, or an equivalent. Fall 2004.

THEO 333. Democracy: Theological Perspectives. This course is a study of democracy from the doctrinal perspectives of ecclesiology (the nature and purpose of the church) and eschatology (the meanings and ethical imperatives of the kingdom of God) that inform Christian faith traditions of social and political engagement. This study includes examinations of various models of democracy; types of religiously- (Christian) inspired engagement in democratic society and government; the meanings of freedom, equality, community, justice and separation of church and state; and conceptions of elected representation and organized dissent within American public life. Fall semesters: 2012, 2016.

THEO 335. Theologies of Liberation. This course is a survey of liberation theologies with particular attention to their historical, social, political, economic, and theological contexts in order to understand the relationship of religion to the concepts of human dignity, justice, and social transformation. Fall 2003.

THEO 337. Theories of Salvation. This course is a study of various theories that have been suggested throughout the history of Christianity in order to explain Christ's work of salvation in its personal, social, and eschatological dimensions. Included in this study are examinations of biblical conceptions of salvation, conceptions of salvation in Christian theology, themes and metaphors for interpreting salvation, and views on Christian proclamation of salvation in a religiously plural and secular world. Fall 2010, Spring 2011.

THEO 340/546. Theology of Martin Luther King, Jr. This course treats Martin Luther King, Jr., as a theologian, evaluating his understanding of Christian doctrines and contribution to systematic theology and theological ethics. Students seeking to enroll in this course ought to have taken Systematic Theology, Black Theology, or Black Church History. Fall 2011. Spring semesters: 2006, 2010, 2015, 2018, 2021, 2023.

THEO 343/525. The Holy Spirit: Pentecostal Perspectives. This course is a study of the Holy Spirit with emphasis on the contributions of and issues raised by Pentecostal and charismatic movements to the understanding of the person and work of the Holy Spirit. Prerequisite: one course in New Testament or church history. Previous course work in systematic theology is recommended. Spring 2004. Fall semesters: 2008, 2014.

THEO 345/545. Theology and Science. This course examines and assesses natural science and technology, their relation to religion and theology, and their influence on the meaning and value of human life. The course examines the history, sociology, and philosophy of modern science as well as theology's own epistemological status as a field of academic inquiry. The course explores ways of relating religion and theology to the natural sciences and various forms of technology. Topics vary with each offering of the course. This semester's offering focuses on theological and scientific conceptions of the origin of the universe. Fall 2009.

THEO 370. Religious Thought of Howard Thurman. This course is a study of the life, ministry, written and spoken works of Howard Thurman and his cultural legacy as a major African American religious leader. With a focus on Thurman's ideal of universal human community, the course examines the relation of Christian faith and spirituality to social justice and racial reconciliation. Fall semesters: 2021, 2023.

THEO 407/507. Race, Ethnicity & Religious Myth. This is a course in political theology that utilizes classical, modern, and contemporary writings to examine the concept of nationhood and the allegiance (loyalty of a seemingly religious nature) owed to the nation in contrast to the global sense of humanity capable of articulation and support in world religions. Among the several myths of the American nation, there are the myths that America is one people and that the nation has a sacred and moral obligation to spread freedom and democracy throughout the world. The course will investigate various racial and ethnic groups' espousals and criticisms of the American myth as well as their contrasting views on allegiance and dissent. Fall 2015.

THEO 415. The Preacher as Theologian. This course is a study of the sermon as a method of theological reflection and medium for conveying ideas, doctrines, and perspectives. The course examines sermons, spoken and written, that illustrate the integration of theology and preaching. Students seeking to enroll in this course ought to have taken Systematic Theology I & II and Preaching and Practicum. Spring semesters: 2012, 2016, 2022. Team-Taught with Dr. Kenyatta Gilbert.

THEO 523. Pentecostal Theology (DMin Module). This course is a survey of the history, methods, recurring themes, and major issues in Pentecostal theology. The survey is inclusive of the legacy of the Azusa Revival and other early centers of Pentecostalism, social and cultural influences in shaping contextual theologies in Pentecostalism, and contributions of Pentecostalism to global Christian theology. Fall 2018.

THES 510. DMin. Seminar: Research & Writing. This course introduces Doctor of Ministry students to processes and methods of research, with the ultimate goal of preparing each student to complete a proposal for presentation to the DMin Project Evaluation Committee. Research and writing skills learned in the course are designed to also aid each student in the completion of his or her DMin project (dissertation). Fall semesters: 2005, 2006, 2008, 2009, 2010.

FDSM. Faith Development and Spiritual Formation. Faith Development and Spiritual Formation is divided into six segments that span the M.Div. program, introducing students to the study of the resources for, and the practice of, spiritual discipline. Course numbers 205 & 206 deal specifically with spiritual disciplines, numbers 305 & 306 deal with religious autobiography, that is, the development of a framework for describing and assessing one's faith journey, and numbers 405 & 406 deal with discernment of one's place in ministry. The combined segments examine a variety of methods by which people of faith have strengthened and deepened their faith commitment. Working in small groups with a faculty advisor, each student explores the rich tradition of spiritual exercises, including prayer, Bible study, and meditation, in order to develop a program which best suits his or her individual needs and personality. The course encourages students to pursue personal growth in professional ministry through collegial settings.

206: Spring semesters: 2004, 2010, 2012, 2016.

305: Spring 2009; Fall semesters: 2012, 2016.

306: Spring 2013.

405: Spring 2007; Fall semesters: 2010, 2017.

406: Fall semesters: 2006, 2008; Spring semesters: 2004, 2006, 2011, 2015.

Thinking Theologically I & II. This is a two part course in theology where students complete practical exercises in theological reflection. Students learn theology by doing theology—working with case studies and interpreting situations and events from a theological perspective. Part One is a survey of the basics in the practice of theology and deals with the construction of Christian theology within the context of and in the service of the church. Part Two deals with the theology of culture, that is, with interpreting as well as addressing beliefs and values of religious significance found within culture. Continuing Education Program. October 2005.

United Lutheran Seminary:

HTH 205B, HTH 214, HTH 335B. African American Theology. This course is a study of contemporary black theology in the United States. The course examines the history, methodology and systematic construction of black theology with a focus on Christology in African American perspective. In this semester's offering of the course, we are endeavoring to reach three goals: (1) to identify and study issues pertaining to the theological interpretation of "black religion," which is regarded as the principal subject matter for black theology; (2) to identify sources and learn methods for doing systematic/constructive black theology; and (3) to examine central themes in black theological accounts of Christology (the person of Christ), inclusive of black and womanist symbols for Christ, interpretations of the teachings and ethics of the historical Jesus in black Christologies, and the meanings of the Cross and Resurrection for interpretations of redemptive suffering, liberation, and salvation. Fall 2012. Spring semesters: 2015, 2017, 2019, 2021.

Lancaster Theological Seminary:

TH 226W. Issues in Religion & Science: Origins, Diversity, Interconnection. This course surveys perspectives on religion and science— ideas about what each is, the epistemological challenges and social crises that each faces, and proposals on how, in a complex manner, religion and science are related in the quests for knowledge, survival, and fulfillment. The course invites students to think broadly, on global and cosmic scales, about human identity, community, and purpose. Scientific studies of the origin and fate of the universe and humankind are brought into a dialogue with Christian doctrines of creation, theological anthropology, salvation, and eschatology. These themes will be drawn together in exploring the significant question: Given that race is discredited as a biological categorization of modern humans but still functions as a marker of personal and group identity, how may the concepts of race and ethnicity be reconstructed in meaningful and practical ways that appreciate human difference, emphasize the unity of humankind, and promote just society? Fall 2020 (Term 1).

Memphis Theological Seminary:

CH 34. Religious Thought of Howard Thurman. This course is a study of the life, ministry, and writings of Howard Thurman and his cultural legacy as a major African American religious personality. This study focuses on Thurman's ideal of community and how his life, ministry, and writings reflect this ideal. Fall 1998.

CH/CM 43. Historical Development of Black Religions in America. This course is a study of African American religions from the colonial period to the present. The course examines the various methodological approaches used in the study and interpretation of African American religions, African traditions and their influence on African American religions, popular folk expressions of religion, the diversity of religious expression among African Americans, including non-Christian as well as Christian religions, the creation of independent black religious organizations, the acculturation of African peoples to Christianity, the evolution and contemporary status of black churches, and the role and various responses of African American religions in revolutionary, reform, and protest movements. Fall semesters: 1997, 1999.

CH/CM 44. The Rise of Independent African American Churches and Denominations. This course is a sequel to CH/CM 43. It focuses on the development, religious life, sociological aspects and functions, and raison d'être of predominately African American churches and denominations. Spring 2000.

TH/AA 42. Martin and Malcolm: The Roles of Religion in Issues of Social Justice. This course is a study of Christian theological and ethical reflection on black liberation. Special attention will be given to the thought and social activism of Martin Luther King, Jr. in light of Malcolm X's alternative theory of black liberation and his critical evaluation of King. An examination will be made of the life, work, intellectual sources, and cultural legacy of both religious leaders. Students are encouraged to develop their own constructive views on the role of Christian faith in black liberation and to begin working out the implications of African American religious perspectives for other issues affecting social and moral life. Summer 1997 (Term I), Spring 2001.

TH/CM 33. African American Theology. This course is a study of contemporary academic Black Theology. The course examines the historical development and explores the subareas of Black Theology. Attention will be given to the principal schools of thought that constitute Black Theology. Also, critical assessments of Black Theology and alternative models for the theological interpretation of African American religion will be examined. Fall 1997; Summer sessions: 1998 (Term II), 2001 (Term II).

TH/ET 03830. Issues in Science and Religion. This course examines and assesses natural science and technology, their relation to theology, and their influence on the meaning and value of human life. The course examines the history, sociology, and philosophy of modern science as well as theology's own epistemological status as a field of academic inquiry. The course explores ways of relating theology to natural science and technology. This semester's offering focuses on theological and scientific conceptions of religious experience and its influence upon the development of consciousness. Summer 2006.

University of Memphis:

AAAS 4251. African Religions in the Diaspora. This course is a study of the transplantation of African religions (those established in or indigenous to West Africa) to the western hemisphere, during the Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade (ca. 1500-1900), and how these religions have changed over time. Religions in this study include: Vodou (in Haiti and United States), Candomblé (in Brazil), Santería (in Cuba, Puerto Rico, and United States), Orisha worship (in United States), Revival Zion & Obeah (in Jamaica), and Islam (in United States & South America). The course also examines the emergence of black humanism as an alternative development to these above religions and Judeo-Christian traditions. Spring 2001, Fall 2001.

Christian Brothers University:

RS 291, 293. African American Religious History. This course is a study of African American religions from the colonial period to the present. The course begins with an examination of various methodological approaches used in the study and interpretation of African American religions and then moves on to survey Neo-African and African-derived religions, examines popular folk expressions of religion, the diversity of religious expressions (i.e., Christian as well as non-Christian traditions) among African Americans, the creation of independent black religious organizations, and the role and various responses of African American religions in revolutionary, reform, and protest movements. Spring 2000, Fall 2000, Summer 2002 (May Session).

RS 292, 299. Martin and Malcolm. This course is a study of Christian theological and ethical reflection on black liberation. Special attention will be given to the thought and social activism of Martin Luther King, Jr. in light of Malcolm X's alternative theory of black liberation and his critical evaluation of King. An examination will be made of the life, work, intellectual sources, and cultural legacy of both religious leaders. Students are encouraged to develop their own constructive views on the role of Christian faith in black liberation and to begin working out the implications of African American religious perspectives for other issues affecting social and moral life. Summer 2000 (May Session), Spring 2001.

Stillman College:

LOG 131. Logic. This is a course in the basics of critical thinking. Study is made of the use of categories, processes of reason, methods of explanation and justification, and common fallacies. Fall 2002, Spring 2003.

PHL 435. Epistemology. A survey of classical and contemporary theories of knowledge. The course also examines critical analyses of epistemology and the use of religious faith and experience and revelation as sources of knowledge. Spring 2003.

REL 131. Introduction to the Old Testament. This course is a survey of the Old Testament. It is designed to provide understanding of the Bible, particularly its Hebraic and Christian heritage, basic concepts, values, terminology, literary styles and forms, principal personalities, places, and setting within the history and culture of the ancient Near East. Emphasis is placed on the meaning, relevance, and value of the Bible for daily living and personal decision-making. Fall 2002.

REL 132. Introduction to the New Testament. This course is a survey of the New Testament. Special attention will be given to (1) depictions of Jesus and interpretations of his teachings about the kingdom of God, (2) the kingdom of God as an ethical ideal for church and social life, and (3) New Testament and later Christian millennialism, that is, doctrines on the second coming of Christ and how the kingdom of God is achieved in (or after) history. Spring 2003.

REL 230. Introductory Theologies. This course is an introduction to the science of theology, its methods, sources, contexts, texts, norms, and tasks. The course attends to a variety of theological movements and projects as a way of introducing the novice student to the discipline. This course is foundational for advanced level courses in theology. Summer 2005.

REL 333. Prophets of the Old Testament. This course is a survey of the prophetic movement in ancient Israel vis-à-vis its historical background. The course attends to the ethics and theology of the prophets and their concerns with devotion to God, traditional religious practices and moral values, and the achievement of justice in society. Fall 2002.

REL 334. Life and Writings of Paul. This course is a study of the times, life and mission of the Apostle Paul, including the settings, occasions and interpretations of his letters, as well as methods of historical and literary criticism used in studying his letters. Summer 2005.

REL 336. Basic Christian Beliefs. This course is a study of the fundamental doctrines of the Church, what they mean, and why they make sense to Christians. Summer 2005.

REL 436. History of Christianity. This course is a survey of the history of Christianity from apostolic times to the present. In this course particular attention is given to Latin and Greek Fathers, the rise of Catholicism (Roman and Eastern Orthodox), the Protestant Reformation, spread of Christianity from Europe, and contemporary movements in Christian thought and practice. Fall 2002.

REL 438. Contemporary Theology. This course is a survey of theological developments since 1750 and an analysis of individual theological statements related to such issues as existentialism, Christian anthropology, secularism, liberation, feminism, ethnicity, indigenization, globalization, hope, work, and play. Summer 2005.

C. H. Mason Bible College/All Saints Bible College:
