Kọ́lápo Abímbọ́lá, Ph.D is a professor in the Department of Philosophy at Howard University. He holds two doctoral degrees — a Ph.D. in Philosophy of Science from the London School of Economics and Political Science and a Ph.D. in the Law of Evidence and Criminal Justice from the University of Birmingham, United Kingdom — as well as an LLB in Law and a B.A. with First Class Honors in Philosophy. In addition to his academic qualifications, he was consecrated as a Babaláwo (expert in the Ifá Literary Corpus) by the Ògeese conclave of diviners of His Imperial Majesty, the Aláàfin of Òyọ́, and has studied Ifá traditions for more than three decades.

Professor Abímbọ́lá's career spans multiple institutions and interdisciplinary domains. Before joining Howard University, he taught philosophy, law, and forensic science at universities including Seattle University, Haverford College, Temple University, and the University of Leicester School of Law. His research interests include African and Africana philosophy, evidence and proof, ethics, logic, and forensic science, and he has published extensively on topics ranging from abductive reasoning in law to cultural dimensions of ethics. He is also on the editorial board of the Journal of Forensic Research and Criminology and served as President of the International Society for African Philosophy and Studies.

In addition to his academic work, Abímbọ́lá is deeply engaged in cultural and community scholarship. He serves as the Ajagunnà Ògún Ágbàyé and President of Ifá University in Alexandria, VA, where he supports the study and preservation of Yoruba philosophical traditions. His contributions extend beyond the academy through public lectures, media engagements, and collaborations that highlight the relevance of African intellectual traditions to contemporary philosophical and ethical discourse.
