

John-Patrick Ifedi Ph.D. is a lecturer in the Department of Political Science. He earned his Ph.D. in Political Science with concentration in the areas of International Political Economy, International Relations and Methodology and Comparative Politics (Africa and the Caribbean) at Howard. Following his public service in the justice department he became fully engaged in academia. As a practitioner of public administration - as social scientist, Interstate Compact section manager, Cognitive Programs Manager - in the U.S. civil service, he served in managerial capacity in various areas of the U.S. federal civil service (U.S. Justice Department, D.C. court services agency, and the superior court of the District of Columbia) for over twenty-two years, between 1990 and 2015.

Ifedi is also making significant contributions to community service in various capacities. In 1992, he founded the Council on African World Affairs in the District of Columbia, a foreign affairs organization dedicated to educating the professional, policy, attentive and general public on policy, political and social developments and issues in the African world. He also founded, in 2014, and presides over the American Social Skills Education and Development group (ASSED), and organization that is focused on providing social and life skills education to the professional and general public. Ifedi is also the president of Machiavel Strategies, a political and economic consulting outfit in Washington, D.C.

His international role in democracy development and democratization is also notable. He has undertaken many political consulting election and democracy development assignments in Eastern Europe, especially Kosovo and Bosnia-i-Herzegovina; the most prominent is his participation as an election supervisor in Tuzla and Banovici, Bosnia, in 1996, under the auspices of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) and the US. State Department to supervise the municipal elections, part of the diplomatic protocols and agreements leading to the cessation of hostilities and end to the Bosnian civil war. Additionally, through the council on African world affairs, he has served as an election monitor and development agent in many presidential elections in Nigeria since the emergence of democracy in Nigeria's fourth republic.

Ifedi has published in various scholarly peer reviewed journals in Political Science and has co-edited two books on U.S. Foreign Policy in addition to having presented in many scholarly conferences in the US and abroad.

Ifedi earned a BA from the State University of Minnesota, Moorhead where he studied biology, chemistry, political science and sociology, an MA. in political science (Public Administration and US. Diplomatic History) from the University of North Dakota, Grand Fork, North Dakota; his Ph.D. in political science with concentration in International Political Economy, International Relations, Comparative Politics and Methodology is from Howard. He also holds a Diploma in Human Services Management (2000) from the University of Maryland and he was selected for a post-doctoral fellowship in Political Economy as an Institute for British and Irish Studies scholar at St. Anthony's College, Oxford and Trinity College, Dublin in 1996. He is a recipient of many awards for his dedication to community leadership, service and public education.