

Robin C. Eury, Ph.D., CCC-SLP is director of the Speech and Hearing Clinic in the Cathy Hughes School of Communications at Howard University, where she leads clinical operations, student training and community engagement initiatives. Since joining Howard in 2021, she has overseen the clinic's service delivery and experiential learning programs, while teaching graduate-level clinical practicum and research courses in communication sciences and disorders. Her work centers on culturally responsive clinical education, supervision and service delivery.

Eury brings more than two decades of experience as a speech-language pathologist, educator and clinical supervisor. Prior to her appointment at Howard, she held faculty roles at North Carolina Central University, including clinical associate professor and clinical supervisor, where she trained graduate clinicians and supported community-based partnerships. She has also practiced in public school systems and clinical settings, providing speech-language services across diverse populations. Her scholarship includes publications and presentations focused on cultural competence, supervision and clinical training in speech-language pathology, with contributions to professional journals, conferences and edited works.
