

Alexander Tulin, Ph.D., is an associate professor in the Department of English at Howard University in Washington, D.C. He earned his doctorate, Master of Philosophy and Master of Arts degrees from Columbia University and received a bachelor's degree with honors from the State University of New York at Purchase. Tulin joined Howard University in 1990 and has served on the faculty for more than three decades, holding appointments in both the Department of Classics and the Department of English. He previously served as chair of the Department of Classics and chair of the Humanities Division.

Tulin's research and teaching interests span classical studies, modernism, American literature, rhetoric, ancient philosophy and the intersections between antiquity and modernity. He has published on topics in Ancient Greek Philosophy, Plato, Ancient Law, Rhetoric, and is currently interested in the cross-cultural interstices between Antiquity and Modernity.

From 2017-2021, he was the Chair of the Department of Classics. But with the closing of Classics in 2021, Dr. Tulin is now in the Dept. of English, where his primary teaching interests are in Modernism, modern art from 1870-1950, and in the 20th century novel in Europe and America.
