

Celia Maxwell, M.D. currently serves as the director of clinical trials and the clinical trials unit at Howard University College of Medicine in Washington D.C and formerly served as the associate dean for research for 12 years. She is also a professor of medicine in infectious diseases as well as the principal investigator of several grants including the HIV Clinical Practice Transformation Project in Zambia.

Additionally, she served as a special assistant to the Commissioner of Food and Drugs, David Kessler, M.D., and as health legislative assistant for Senator Tom Harkin (D. Iowa). She was inducted into the Washington D.C. Hall of Fame and is currently serving as a member of the Scientific Advisory Board and the External Advisory Board for the CITI program. She also served as a member of the US President's Emergency Plan for Aids Relief (PEPFAR) from 2015 to 2024.

She obtained a Bachelor of Science in Nursing from Hunter College and her medical degree from Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, both in New York City. She completed her residency training in Internal Medicine at Howard University Hospital and a Fellowship in Parasitology at the National Institutes of Health, Laboratory of Parasitic Diseases. She is board certified in Internal Medicine and Infectious Diseases, is a Fellow of the American College of Physicians and the Infectious Diseases Society of America, as well as a member of several boards and scientific associations. To date she has conducted international medical site visits or served as a lecturer in Cuba, Haiti, Panama, Dubai UAE, Uganda, Zambia, Senegal, Beijing, India and Brazil.