

Gillian Robinson-Warner, D.D.S. is an associate professor with indefinite tenure at the Howard University College of Dentistry. She is an accomplished clinician-educator, researcher and dental administrator with extensive experience in academic dentistry, private practice ownership and community-based oral health initiatives. She serves as assistant director of the Restorative Division in the Department of Comprehensive Care at Howard University College of Dentistry, where she is also an associate professor, course director for Behavioral Dentistry and module coordinator for Restorative Dentistry.

Robinson-Warner earned her Doctor of Dental Surgery degree from Howard University in 1996 and subsequently completed a general practice residency at St. Vincent Charity Hospital in Cleveland, Ohio. Her academic foundation also includes undergraduate studies in biology and chemistry at John Carroll University. She holds active dental licenses in Washington, D.C., and Virginia.

In her leadership role at Howard University, which she has held since 2018, Robinson-Warner develops and manages clinical and departmental schedules, provides direct supervision in the D1 simulation laboratory, and delivers didactic and simulation-based instruction across multiple courses, including Behavioral Dentistry, Dental Materials, Restorative Dentistry and Operative Dentistry. She oversees restorative faculty, mentors students and serves as a faculty adviser for the American Student Dental Association and Delta Phi Sigma Dental Sorority. She has also supervised dental students on Rural Area Medical mission trips throughout the United States and Jamaica, reinforcing her commitment to service learning and underserved populations.

In addition to her academic career, Robinson-Warner is a practicing dentist and successful entrepreneur. She is co-owner of G and G Dental Group in Washington, D.C., where she has practiced since 2019, and previously co-owned Warner Dental Care LLC in Bowie, Maryland, from 2008 to 2019. Her clinical practice includes comprehensive general dental services, including clear aligner therapy, sleep apnea management, pediatric dentistry, crown and bridge, minor oral surgery and endodontic therapy. Her prior clinical leadership includes serving as lead dentist at Small Smiles Dental Center and as a dental associate with Ocean Dental, where she primarily provided care to Medicaid and underserved pediatric populations.

Robinson-Warner is an active scholar with a strong publication record focused on oral-systemic health, health disparities, tobacco use, food insecurity, the impact of infectious diseases on dental education and underserved communities. Her work has been published in peer-reviewed journals, including Acta Scientific Dental Sciences, Journal of Dental Education, Journal of Public Health Dentistry and Journal of the National Medical Association. She is currently involved in a Colgate-sponsored study evaluating the effectiveness of a cognitive behavioral therapy-based intervention to improve oral hygiene outcomes in adolescents. She has also completed advanced research ethics training through the Collaborative Institutional Training Initiative.

A sought-after speaker, Robinson-Warner has delivered invited lectures at national meetings, including the Greater New York Dental Conference, on topics related to dentistry in underserved communities, cultural competency and diversity in dental education.

Her excellence in teaching and service has been recognized with multiple honors, including Female Faculty of the Year in 2024 and 2025, Outstanding Clinical Professor of the Year at Howard University from 2020-23, and induction into the International College of Dentists in 2023.

Robinson-Warner maintains active membership in numerous professional organizations, including the American Dental Education Association, Academy of General Dentistry, Jamaica Dental Association and American Dental Association. Her community service includes participation in international and domestic dental missions, COVID-19 vaccination and testing initiatives, and annual programs such as Give Kids a Smile Day.

Through her integrated roles as a clinician, educator, researcher and mentor, Robinson-Warner remains deeply committed to advancing oral health equity, fostering inclusive dental education and improving access to care for underserved populations.

Outside of her professional endeavors, Robinson-Warner enjoys traveling with her family and boxing. She has also completed several half-marathons, 5K races and 10K races.